

Masterpiece of unrequited love

Dante's love depicted in Pre-Raphaelite painting

EMILY HAHN EPOCH TIMES STAFF

Dante Gabriel Rossetti's largest painting depicts Dante's unrequited love in a quintessential example of the Pre-Raphaelite Rossetti, possibly Dante's greatest fan, completed Dante's Dream at the Death of Beatrice in 1871. Dante Aligheri is bestknown for his Divine Comedy, considered a literary masterpiece of the Italian language and world literature

Known as "il Sommo Poeta" ("the Supreme Poet"), he was also famous for his autobiographic work La Vita Nuova, and it is the following stanza from this work upon which the English painter based his paint-writer of his generation who chronicled the emotional drama of American small-town life with searing wit and vivid prose, died on Tuesday of lung

"It is with great sadness that I report that John Updike died this morning," said Nicholas Latimer of Alfred

A. Knopf, a unit of Random House. "He was one of our greatest writers, and he will Updike died in a hospice in cancer. He was 76.

Then Love said: "Now shall all things be made clear: Come and behold our lady where These 'wildering fantasies Then carried me to see my lady

Even as I there was led, Her ladies with a veil were cov-And with her was such a very humbleness That she appeared to say, "I am

In this stanza, Dante tells how in a dream he was led by a personification of Love to the deathbed of his beloved Beatrice. Dante actually met Beatrice only twice in his life. However, he writes that it was her purity that struck him so Updike was known for mining themes of sexual tension, and spiritual and moral angst in small-town settings issues he explored through his four novels and a novella

Harry "Rabbit" Angstrom.

Pulitzer.

Massachusetts, the state where his short stories, poetry and about the life of the fictional 1981, won the Pulitzer Prize for fiction. A decade later,

Rabbit at Rest won a second

One of America's most prolific writers, Updike was acclaimed nearly as much for Rabbit is Rich, published in hopelessly in love with her. Dante practised his courtship the medieval way – subtly and behind the scenes. He admired Beatrice from afar and idolised her in his writings.

In the painting, a dreaming Dante is led by Love to Beatrice just before she is carried off from this world forever. Dante's unrequited love for Beatrice glows as Love gives Beatrice the kiss that Dante never gave.

Two attendant figures clad in green robes suspend a canopy over Beatrice as they cast sad glances at the poet. Blossoms cover the pall, and the floor is strewn with poppies

A heart can be seen behind the pall, and above it hangs a lamp that is fading. Two scarlet birds, the colour of love, fly throughout the room as angels hover outside the window, ready to carry Beatrice to

A group of English painters, poets, and critics founded the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood in 1848. Rossetti's attempt to link poetry, painting, and social idealism together contributed deeply and caused him to fall to the Brotherhood's quiding quited love for Beatrice. The

For many readers, he was well known as a seemingly endless source of short stories in The New Yorker magazine.

Born in Reading, Pennsylvania, he studied English at Harvard University, where he contributed to, and later edited, the satirical Harvard

Lampoon magazine. He later joined the writing staff of The 2005, he said his view of himself as a writer had changed in

In a Reuters interview in New Yorker.

American writer John Updike dies principles and was key to its

The Brotherhood encouraged artists to apply their own understandings and ideas to their art. The spiritual and creative integrity of medieval culture particularly intrigued the group. The Brotherhood tried to revive the aesthetic style prominent before that of the Renaissance artist Raphael.

The colour green dominates this work; even the skin tones have green hues. The figure Love contrasts with this by his red attire, and Beatrice stands out in her pale brightness.

The limited palette serves to spotlight the central figures. Orthogonal lines all point toward the central images, Love giving Beatrice a kiss.

The gazes of the other figures and even the ceiling lines all point toward the centre. Exits on both sides point both into and out of the central

Pre-Raphaelite art was heavy with symbolism. The exits show how singular and lonely Dante was in his unrestruggled with the short-story he preferred - short stories, novels, poetry or criticism - years ago I would have said short stories is where I feel most at home. I'm not sure I do feel totally at home any more, whether I have maybe written

"In a short story, as short all my short stories," he said.

a form as it is, you've got

When asked which genre

"If I had been asked that ten rest of the world outside the frames of the painting continued its daily activities while Dante watches Beatrice dying. But Dante himself described the scene as Florence mourning her passing, as the viewer sees church bells in the distance ringing.

Love holds an arrow in his hand pointed at Dante's heart, and a branch of apple blossoms, which symbolise Dante's love that never bore fruit - "plucked before the coming of fruit".

Poppies on the floor symbolise death, while sprigs of hawthorn in the attendants' hair show their connection with death. The dying lamp above the canopy symbolises the end of Dante's love for Beatrice. Both the vivid colours and extensive symbolism in this painting work to make it a quintessential example of Pre-Raphaelite art.

The original work was too large to fit the walls of the first buyer, so a perturbed Rossetti took the painting back and resold it several times before its final home at the Walker Gallery in Liverpool, England.

towards a certain effect at the end. That's maybe a muscular feat that I've lost muscle to perform," he added. "But anyway I'm still trying."

He was candid about the need to get writing published of a book reviewer and an art reviewer for that matter than there is a comfort when you sit down to write one of these that you'll be sure that it will get printed and you'll get paid for it. It's not the case with a ever planned to. At least

"I've become much more and paid for, saying:

Take a relaxing break at our guest-house situated in the Brecon Beacons National Park. Ideal for walk-

Talybont-on-Usk, Brecon LD3

www.stayinwales.co.uk/haw-

New Cosmos Travel Agency

Flights to China at best prices.

SOUND AND AUDIO SERV-porate and special events.

Freedom for China

Please call 0208 358 4418 for more details or email contact@

Sound system for live music, cor-

High quality equipment operated www.newcosmos.co.uk newcosmos.co.uk.

ICES

K2 Sound

ing with stunning views.

Tel 01874 676337

The future belongs to the right

A WHOLE NEW MIND

by Daniel H. Pink

CHRISTINA RIVELAND EPOCH TIMES STAFF

Daniel H. Pink's book, A Whole New Mind – Why Right-Brainers will Rule the Future, a 2005 copyright, is one of those reads that will stick with me for a long time. Once I picked it up I could not put it down, and will re-read it again. The bright orange cover makes it easy for me to locate quickly if it gets tem-porarily shelved with other author's abundant experience as a former presidential speechwriter is an asset for this text. His writing is logical, sequential and flows exceptionally well, from topic to topic, and chapter to chapter.

His premise, that the future of global business belongs to the right-brainers, and his well-thought out arguments are a guide to surviving in the fast-paced, topsy-turvy world we live in right now. Pink's explanation – that we are moving from the information age, left brain-thinking to right brain-thinking the conceptual age, and why – is beautifully supported by his observations

He details the reasons for this switch with his three "A's" abundance, Asia, and automation. Uncounted numbers of folks in Asia, particularly India, can do rote, white collar work (left-brain) much less expensively than those who might hold similar jobs in the United States. This change affects all of us, and it seems only logical then to free ourselves to do more creating, inventing, and building (right brain thinking).

How to go about this?

Before I comment on this, let's look at the book's beginning that outlines four major eras: the agricultural age (farmers), the industrial age (factory workers), the information age (knowledge workers) and the conceptual age (creators and age conceptual). empathisers)

Interesting, pertinent black and white drawings are sprinkled throughout the easy-to-follow text. Pink poses several crucial questions appearance of these several crucial districts. tions: can a computer do these tasks faster, is what I have to offer in demand in an age of abundance, and can someone overseas do it cheaper?

Pink reminds us repeatedly that we live in an age of abundance and urges us to develop our creative abilities if we want to be competitive, whether related to commodities or to something else. To do this, we need to focus on six essential attributes he authlines and enlarges upon outlines and enlarges upon: Design – moving beyond function to engage the senses; Story – narrative added to products and services, not just argument; Symphony – add-ing invention and big picture Published by Marshall Cavendish thinking, not merely detailed focus; Empathy – going beyond logic and engaging mentarial fool

Meaning – immaterial feelings and values of products.
He calls Story the best of the six. The example of a wine label sticks in my mind.

The author supports his

The author supports his suggestions with many quotes from literature, the arts and great thinkers. Actually, what he applies to the business world has equal value for writers, musicians and other

Pink did a fine writing job and expressed his thoughts in an easy to follow manner. I highly recommend this book to anyone looking for professional/business success or personal fulfilment. The paperback version has been updated and includes new material. The text has been translated into 18 different languages.

A love supreme

THE ANTIDOTE – Classic poetry for modern life

A reading from 'Dr Faustus' by Christopher Marlowe

CHRISTOPHER NIELD SPECIAL TO THE EPOCH TIMES

Helen of Troy

Was this the face that launched a thousand ships, And burnt the topless towers of Ilium? Sweet Helen, make me immortal with a kiss: Her lips suck forth my soul, see where it flies! Come Helen, come, give me my soul again. Here will I dwell, for heaven be in these lips, And all is dross that is not Helena! I will be Paris, and for love of thee, Instead of Troy shall Wittenberg be sacked; And I will combat with weak Menelaus, And wear thy colours on my plumed crest; Yea, I will wound Achilles in the heel, And then return to Helen for a kiss. O thou art fairer than the evening air, Clad in the beauty of a thousand stars; Brighter art thou than flaming Jupiter When he appeared to hapless Semele; More lovely than the monarch of the sky In wanton Arethusa's azured arms; And none but thou shalt be my paramour.

Romantic love inspires our finest and perhaps our most ridiculous emotions. It takes us a million miles from such dull necessities as reasonableness, proportion and common sense, and we are only too grateful for the holiday. For a moment everything seems possible. For a second we are heroes in some ancient story: Anthony and Cleopatra or Romeo and Juliet.

This mixture of the sublime and the comical is well caught in this extract from Marlowe's play Dr Faustus, in which the evil magician calls on a demon to bring forth the legendary beauty, Helen of Troy, whose abduction by Paris caused the Trojan War. No sooner has Faustus made his request, then it is granted. The Devil is nothing if not eager to please.

Helen enters and time appears to stand still; Marlowe's soaring poetry sweeps us into Faustus's awestruck reverie. "Was this the face that launched a thousand ships/ And burnt the topless towers of Ilium?" he wonders, as we fall into wonder too. These worldfamous lines evoke overwhelming rapture; and the way in which infatuation drives men to feats of heartbreaking courage and apocalyptic carnage.

The towers of Ilium, referring to Troy, appear topless because they stretch up into the sky, as if infinite, and yet we see them burn and turn to rubble, humbled

Who wouldn't wage war to kiss the beatific Helen? Faustus, who has rejected God to seek omnipotence, is desperate for lasting glory. But how likely is it that this strange apparition will make him

The lines "Her lips suck forth my soul" convey the intensity of love's first kiss, when all of our being seems to be taken up, yet there is a note of horror too. His soul is quite literally being stolen away, damning him for all eternity. Hell is in these lips and Helena is nothing if not dross.

Faustus's mind whirls faster and faster, falling into a frenzy of images. When he boasts "I will be Paris", it's hard not to pity him, for there is perhaps a painful sense of recognition on the part of every reader. Who doesn't want to feel like a hero when in love? Who wouldn't want to think one's love was destined to make history? Yet

Faustus is far from being the great hero: he is a pale, thin, book-devouring geek who wastes his genius on delusions of grandeur.

His claim that "Instead of Troy shall Wittenberg be sacked" is too silly to take seriously. This German university town may have been the home of the Protestant revolution, but it cannot withstand the epic comparison. It just sounds too prosaic. It's the equivalent of saying, "Instead of Troy shall Boston Common be sacked" while trying to keep a straight face. Still, brilliant poetry shines through his feverish idiocy. "O thou art fairer than the evening air/ Clad in the beauty of a thousand stars" is a stunning couplet that would reduce any lover to tears

And yet at this peak of romantic vision, something distinctly odd happens – something we don't notice at first maybe, as we rush through all the unfamiliar classical allusions, while squinting at the footnotes. Faustus compares Helen to the male divinities Jupiter and the mysterious "monarch of the skies", so the gloating Satanist becomes, in turn, the hapless Semele ravished by Jupiter, and the sorrowful nymph Arethusa hunted down by the rivergod Alpheus – believed to have been related to Faustus is the butt of a cruel prank, one that takes him from dreams of becoming a kind of superman to ending up as the archetypal female victim. On the one hand, on a psychological level, this may describe the tragic arc we trace when we are besotted with someone wildly inappropriate. On the other, this tells something about the seductions and stupidities of evil. After all, this is hardly likely to be the real Helen. In fact, while Faustus is waxing lyrical, the audience in the theatre may see this Helen for what she is: a smirking, scarlet-skinned, hornéd beast. The good doctor conjures up demons to transcend both God and humanity, but as he sweeps off the stage in triumph, the Devil has the last terrible laugh.

Christopher "Kit" Marlowe (1564–1593) was an English dramatist, poet and translator of the Elizabethan era.

EPOCH TIMES CLASSIFIEDS

BOSTON (Reuters) - American author John Updike, a leading he lived for many years. Updike was know

AUTO SERVICES

be sorely missed."

PVS: Project Vehicle Services Repair and restoration of Classic Vehicles and Kit Cars. Also offering shot blasting and exhaust manufacture. Manningtree, Essex. For free advice call Keith or Sara on 01206 395636.

BMW alloy wheels Please contact Max for details: on 07877 743 299 or email dragononline33@hotmail.com

BUSINESS SERVICES

East London Small Business Centre (ELSBC) Free training and advice for start ups and expanding businesses in East London. Call 0207 377 8821 or visit www. goeast.org to arrange an appoint-

3 Lotus Media

Ethical branding and design for start ups and small businesses. Call 0203 178 7513 for more details or visit www.3lotusmedia.

CATERING/FOOD SUPPLIERS

Wick Fisheries

Quality fish and chips at East-End prices. 245 Wick Road London E95DG Tel: 0208 985 9560

COMPUTER SERVICES

Technology Ltd Open server solutions for small businesses Contact email: info@gatekeeper. Itd.uk, phone: 01223 414 712

Total Computer Service Computer services for the home and small business Hourly rate £25 per hour. Call James on 07958181259

ETHICAL/ECO

3 Lotus Media Ethical marketing / branding design consultancy Got an amazing ethical / ecofriendly product or service? In need of a new website or better branding design?

www.3lotusmedia.co.uk/ etoffer.html to see our special offers exclusive to Epoch Times readers or call 0203 178 7513 for

Greensense

www.greensense.co.uk Eco-friendly household cleaning products and homewares. Ideal gift ideas for the green con-critical essays as for his novels. an increasing volume of art and literary criticism and he paused.

GARDENING SERVICES/ HOME IMPROVEMENTS

recent years as he produced to make everything count

Decorate Wise Painting and decorating supplies in Balham.

We are a family-run shop offering trade prices and expert advice. Please see our website www.decoratewise.co.uk or call 020 8772

Gardening and outdoor maintenance. Domestic and commercial. Friendly service, based North London. Call to arrange free estimate. John Eatwell. 020 8376 9133 gardening@johneatwell.co.uk

TRANSLATION SERVICES

TRAVEL

The Hawthorns

Qualified interpretation and translation services (NRPSI) - Chinese and English. Contact Xia on 07828 447 701 by very experienced engineers. Call 07917 843244 or email info@ k2pa.com

Music inspired by human rights in China. Global community of musicians with musical styles as diverse as folk music to hip-hop. To get involved or find out more please visit www.freedomforchina.

