Nigeria is the third-largest petroleum exporter to the United States.

In its importance. Higher oil prices have often bolstered Nigeria Delta contrasts. Naturally, the United States will support a more just and transparent Africa and conflict on the continent today.

The State Department has yet to acknowledge the visit of Caron and Sanders. But if it is not the strong negative reaction from Nigerians soci-

ean as an overreaction, it has either removed the perceived threat

or failed to come up with a coherent policy. Africa doesn't need strong politics.

After meeting with Bahangida

in Kano, the United States is likely to be more focused and coherent in its

policy, a fact that the government had never planned to acknowledge.

Meeting with him wouldn't bother to amaze the Nigeria government.

But once again, it's all pre-election.

James Sanders, the third-ranking

secretary for African Affairs James

Carson, and Sanders. But if it sees the strong

negative reaction from Nigerians soci-

ean as an overreaction, it has ei-

ther removed the perceived threat

or failed to come up with a coherent

policy. Africa doesn't need strong

politics.

After meeting with Bahangida

in Kano, the United States is likely to

be more focused and coherent in its

policy, a fact that the government

had never planned to acknowledge.

Meeting with him wouldn't bother to

amaze the Nigeria government.

But once again, it's all pre-election.

James Sanders, the third-ranking

secretary for African Affairs James

Carson, and Sanders. But if it sees the strong

negative reaction from Nigerians soci-

ean as an overreaction, it has ei-

ther removed the perceived threat

or failed to come up with a coherent

policy. Africa doesn't need strong

politics.

After meeting with Bahangida

in Kano, the United States is likely to

be more focused and coherent in its

policy, a fact that the government

had never planned to acknowledge.

Meeting with him wouldn't bother to

amaze the Nigeria government.

But once again, it's all pre-election.

James Sanders, the third-ranking

secretary for African Affairs James

Carson, and Sanders. But if it sees the strong

negative reaction from Nigerians soci-

ean as an overreaction, it has ei-

ther removed the perceived threat

or failed to come up with a coherent

policy. Africa doesn't need strong

politics.

After meeting with Bahangida

in Kano, the United States is likely to

be more focused and coherent in its

policy, a fact that the government

had never planned to acknowledge.

Meeting with him wouldn't bother to

amaze the Nigeria government.

But once again, it's all pre-election.

James Sanders, the third-ranking

secretary for African Affairs James

Carson, and Sanders. But if it sees the strong

negative reaction from Nigerians soci-

ean as an overreaction, it has ei-

ther removed the perceived threat

or failed to come up with a coherent

policy. Africa doesn't need strong

politics.

After meeting with Bahangida

in Kano, the United States is likely to

be more focused and coherent in its

policy, a fact that the government

had never planned to acknowledge.

Meeting with him wouldn't bother to

amaze the Nigeria government.

But once again, it's all pre-election.

James Sanders, the third-ranking

secretary for African Affairs James

Carson, and Sanders. But if it sees the strong

negative reaction from Nigerians soci-

ean as an overreaction, it has ei-

ther removed the perceived threat

or failed to come up with a coherent

policy. Africa doesn't need strong

politics.

After meeting with Bahangida

in Kano, the United States is likely to

be more focused and coherent in its

policy, a fact that the government

had never planned to acknowledge.