Tourists Descend on Super Bowl Boulevard

NEW YORK—Super Bowl fans have finally arrived. Anticipating the swell of humanity, workers had partitioned off a Midtown stretch of Broadway days before—some locals had no idea why. But when the clock struck noon on Wednesday, “Super Bowl Boulevard” was already filled with as many fans donning Jets and Giants items as those in Seahawks or Broncos memorabilia.

“We tried to get to the Vincent Lombardi trophy but the line is like two and a half hours long,” said Aneasha Powell, who lives five minutes from the MetLife Stadium where the game will be held in New Jersey. Like many others on Broadway, Powell will be watching the game from home but was excited about events in New York.

Jennifer Roach from Brooklyn was on the boulevard Wednesday to take pictures and came back for more pregame events with her football hat and Giants-branded clothing Thursday. Some of the lines were too long for her, but “we live in New York. We can just come back tomorrow for that,” Roach said.

Tappan Zee’s Heavy Lifter

Tugboats guide custom-built crane from West Coast to New York Harbor

By Genevieve Belmaker
Epoch Times Staff

JERSEY CITY—One of the largest cranes in the world arrived in New York Harbor Thursday morning, ending a six-week, 6,000-mile trip over water that included a pass through the Panama Canal. For Jim Daley, though, it was all in a day’s work.

Daley is director of operations for Foss Maritime, the Seattle-based company whose tugboats escorted the rudderless, engineless barge carrying the so-called I Lift NY Super Crane.

The crane is part of Tappan Zee Constructors’ $3.12 billion package to build the new Tappan Zee Bridge just north of New York City. It was custom-designed and built for the project.

“We’ve taken bigger and we’ve taken smaller,” said Daley at Weeks Marine in Jersey City Thursday, where the crane will stay docked until spring. Around late March or early April, different tugs will take it the final 25 miles up the Hudson River to the project site.
